A Snapshot of Alexandria's Children

The Department of Community and Human Services usually has about 100 children in care. About half of the children are part of large sibling groups, almost half are middle school age or older, and the majority are Black. The average time an Alexandria child spends in foster care is at least one year.

Only a few can be Resource Parents, but everyone can help children in foster care. You can help, too!

Children in foster care in Alexandria rely on community support. The Fund for Alexandria's Child aids vulnerable children by providing resources for experiences and necessities that cannot be funded otherwise, such as sports equipment, school pictures, music lessons, and graduation attire. These provisions are essential for helping children grow and integrate with their peers.

What is Foster Care?

Foster care is a temporary living arrangement providing parenting for children who cannot stay in their homes because of abuse, neglect or other family problems. The goal of foster care is to make children safer and strengthen families. When a child or youth comes into the care of DCCHS, reunification with their family is always the first goal and preferred plan. While a child is in foster care, social workers, resource parents and birth parents work together to help the child return home. Resource parents are key partners in achieving the best outcomes for families.

Who Are the Children in Foster Care?

Children in the City of Alexandria's foster care system are between the ages of 0-18. Most often the children in need of placement are not babies or toddlers; they are teenagers, sibling groups, or children with varying mental behavioral, emotional or physical health needs. Some children have been significantly impacted by traumatic experiences and very much need stability and attention.

While all types of resource families are desired, there is a strong need in the City of Alexandria for resource families who are willing to care for teenagers. Resource families who can care for sibling groups and individuals who can speak Spanish are also needed. The resource unit matches children with parents who can best meet their needs. We are committed to your success as a resource parent, providing the training, resources, and unwavering support you need to thrive.
