Caregiver Tip:
Self-Care for Caregivers

Caregiving requires emotional and physical demands that are difficult to manage at times. This overload of responsibilities can lead to neglecting your own needs. This month, we celebrate the sacrifices of caregivers, say thank you for all that you do and remind you to take care of yourself. Finding the time for self-care can be difficult. Below are tips to lessen burnout and help you feel your best.

- Being nice to yourself is a big part of self care. Being positive in your thoughts can help you and your loved one be more effective.
- Try deep breathing for just 10 minutes a day to ease stress and tension.
- Mediation and relaxation techniques such as mindfulness mediation can reduce stress and strengthen physical health.
- Eating well and getting quality sleep are also key factors in taking care of yourself and reducing stress.
- Maintain relationships with friends, family or through a caregiver support group.
